2015-2016 School Year

Dear Parents and students,

AP world history is the study of the world's history from the beginning of man through the modern era and it is broken up into 6 periods that we study throughout the year. Students are prepared for the AP exam in May. Students who enroll in AP World History are expected to register for and take the AP exam.

AP World History is a very challenging course. Students will not only be responsible for learning about history but they will also have to be able to analyze historical documents and write essays about history analytically and spend time studying for in-class exams and the AP exam. The AP World History exam is comprised of 70 multiple choice questions and 3 essays; the Document Based Question, the Change and Continuity Over Time question, and the Comparative question. The students will be writing several timed essays during the year to prepare for the AP World History exam (essays are exam grades). All in-class multiple choice tests will also be timed.

Students will have weekly Cornell notes due no later than Fridays by 11:59 PM through blackboard (Cornell notes can be turned in earlier than Friday; it is highly recommended that students not wait and turn in their notes as soon as possible). Students will not have Cornell notes due on major holidays; see Cornell schedule. Late work is not accepted. Students will have in class assignments; if the assignments are not completed in class students will need to complete them on their own time (Cornell notes and assignments are 30% of a student's grade). Students will also complete timelines that are an important part of their AP World History grade. All students that enroll in AP World History will have a summer assignment: to complete Cornell notes for chapters 1-5 of the AP World History textbook (see sample Cornell notes). Students will have a test on chapter 1-5 during the 1st three week grading period.

To be successful in World History AP students must study for exams, complete and turn in assignments on time, and make use of any tutorial offered when needed.

Cheating during tests or on assignments is unacceptable and students will receive a zero for the assignment/essay/test.

Please see the attached materials.
